

The Saboteur's Logic

Think of the last time you sabotaged yourself. Notice where shame or frustration lives in your body right now—perhaps a sinking in the chest or a heaviness in the shoulders. This is the weight of self-betrayal. But beneath it lies a protector, doing its best to keep you safe.

1. A pattern of self-sabotage I keep repeating is (procrastinating, overspending, pushing people away, quitting before I succeed, numbing out).

I notice this pattern when I .

.....

.....

.....

2. This pattern protects me from (success, visibility, rejection, having to change, being truly seen).

If I didn't sabotage myself, I might have to face .

.....

.....

.....

3. If my saboteur had a voice, it would say:

"I do this because ."

"I am trying to keep you safe from ."

.....

.....

.....